A: This is the obvious-but-no-longer-working solution: Local Area Network SATA drive (your game disc) One of the USB ports on your computer (might need to copy the disc into the flash drive) HDMI monitor HDD (maybe a SSD, but not mandatory) VoIP call If you have a LAN interface other than Ethernet, you'd need a crossover cable as well. Use the same port for game disc and flash drive/USB port, otherwise, you won't be able to play the disc after your connection gets cut. If you don't have a crossover cable, your only option would be to use the USB port in your USB hub and hook up the HDD and HDMI monitor to the hub. The present invention relates to a door. More particularly, it relates to a door of the type having a frame and a cover or plate mounted thereto. The prior art includes a large number of doors which have been developed and formed to provide a good seal and to withstand high wind loads. In order to provide the required strength and seal, a door is typically formed of a number of separate parts such as the frame, the cover or plate and reinforcements arranged between the cover or plate and the frame. Typically, the reinforcements are mounted in the door by means of a suitable adhesive, for example, a hot melt glue. However, such hot melt adhesives typically cannot be applied evenly or at a uniform rate which results in undesirable variations in the strength of the adhesion between the components of the door. Furthermore, the cover or plate may be mounted in such a door by screws, rivets or other mechanisms, which also results in a non-uniform flow rate of the adhesive, that is, a non-uniform rate of application of the adhesive to the cover or plate. Furthermore, high strength and resistance to high wind loads is typically required in the prior art doors of the type described. Thus, in the prior art doors of this type, the frame and cover may be formed of a material with a minimum of additional reinforcement and the adhesive and/or the reinforcements may have a non-uniform flow rate. This results in an undesirably weak door, thus defeating the purpose of using such a door in the first place. It is, therefore, an object of the present invention to provide a door having a frame and a cover mounted to the frame in which the cover is mounted in

Robert L. WETHERTON, Defendant and Appellant. No. 13608. Supreme Court of Utah. October 15, 1974. Albin O. Hanson, of Hanson & Tyler, Salt Lake City, for defendant and appellant. Vernon B. Romney, Atty. Gen., Robert C. Hilliard, Salt Lake City, for plaintiff and respondent. *943 OAKS, Justice: Appeal from a judgment of conviction of the crime of assault with intent to commit rape.[1] Defendant and his wife lived in a trailer on the exterior lot of a two-family dwelling in Salt Lake City. Defendant's housemate was also his wife's brother. On October 16, 1972, the victim, a woman, went to the trailer to see if the two men were going to play baseball. The defendant, then age 30, was in the house, the housemate was not there, but a child was there and was acting as a lookout. As the woman left, she saw the defendant face the house. Two neighbors then pulled up in their car and gave chase. As the man ran back toward the house, he bumped into his wife's brother, who threw a baseball bat at him. Defendant was arrested and tried to the court. The jury found the defendant guilty of assault with intent to commit rape. The evidence was sufficient to support the jury's verdict. On appeal defendant claims: (1) that his right of confrontation was infringed when the complaining witness' sister was allowed to testify; (2) that the defendant's rights were infringed when the defendant was not given the right to confront and cross-examine the complaining witness; (3) that the defendant was unduly restricted in his examination of the complaining witness and her sister; and (4) that the court erred in giving the State's instruction number 570a42141b
