Create an archive of all the files you wish to include. Use the command prompt to create an empty folder, move all the files and then place them in that folder. For example (for Windows 10) mkdir C:\temp\myarchive Move all files from C:\AI\Files to C:\temp\myarchive Move the Zip file into C:\temp\myarchive Delete the original folder C:\AI\Files Create a ZIP archive from C:\temp\myarchive If you like to automate this task, refer to Command-Line ZIP app which allows you to automate this task from a command prompt. A. Update (15-Nov-2017): This is solved in this answer. How to create an archive from files on Windows? The process described here is applicable to Windows XP, Windows 7 and Windows 10. Create a new file folder and move all the files you want to back up into it. Double-click filefolder. Right-click filefolder and select Rename. Change the name to something appropriate, e.g. backup. Now right-click filefolder and select Properties. Click the Advanced tab. In the Advanced Properties dialog, expand the Root Folder item and select its Directory subitem. (If you expanded the wrong child item, then that's what you need to fix.) In the properties dialog's Edit button, choose Create Shortcut. Create a shortcut in the Backup folder for the filefolder you want to archive. (If you make a shortcut to a file on the desktop, which Windows automatically does by default, then the shortcut is created in the same folder as the desktop)
