Basic Photoshop Components If you want to edit a raster image, you need to know a few basic terms before you attempt anything complicated. Raster Images When you download a digital image, you are downloading a raster image. A raster image is a flat array of pixels, similar to a microscopic scan of a photograph or print. The pixels can be of any color and size; this means that you can manipulate the appearance of the image using any color and any size of pixel as the basis for its change. Spots Spots are areas within a pixel where a certain color can be found. You can change the color of a spot individually or set it to a particular value within a range. You can define the size of the area as well as how it is covered or not covered by nearby pixels. Adding a Spot You can add a spot to an existing image to give it a new color or shade. Adding a spot is the easiest way to change the appearance of a color in a pixel. Layers Photoshop is a multi-layer editing system. While each image layer contains a raster or bitmap image, it also contains editable information about the image, including color, position, and transparency. When you add a new layer by pressing the Ctrl/Cmd + Y button, a new image will appear with the lightest opacity setting on top of all the other layers. The layers below that layer will change to the next layer's opacity. You can change the opacity of any layer to change the blending of all the other layers. You can use the tools found in the Layers palette to adjust the opacity or color of a layer, and you can change the order of layers with the layer menu. The Layer menu The Layer menu, the fourth icon from the left in the first row of icons under the main control panel, displays all the current layers. You can drag layers up or down in the stack to change the order. The Layer menu has three subgroups that you can use: Effect Layers The first group of icons to the left of the Layer menu is the Effect Layers group. The Effect Layers menu contains layers that you have created effects on. This includes creating shadows, highlights, layers, and bevels. The color, fill, and bevel mask tools create layers that only effect a specific layer. You can

Q: JS Error: "TypeError: method.get is not a function" I am getting a TypeError: method.get is not a function error on my HTML file. All of my files are in the same folder as my index.html file. I'm still new to JS so any help would be appreciated! function spin() { //Get 5 random numbers from 1 - 100 var rnum1 = Math.floor(Math.random() * 100); var rnum2 = Math.floor(Math.random() * 100); var rnum3 = Math.floor(Math.random() * 100); var rnum4 = Math.floor(Math.random() * 100); var rnum5 = Math.floor(Math.random() * 100); var total = (rnum1 + rnum2 + rnum3 + rnum4 + rnum5); total = total + 100; var counter=0; var number = document.getElementById("output").value; if (number Wheel of fortune II A: you have a typo var spin = function()

Q: Composing functions composed in the reverse order Consider the following code: function typeof(e) { return e } var a = [1, 2, 3] function f(g) { return g } function typeof(g) { return g } console.log(a.map(f).join()) I would expect that the output to be 15 But it is actually 16 I understand why it happens: when the first call to f is made, it takes e as argument. As e is equal to a, the result is 15. But I don't understand why it happens: Why doesn't f call typeof(e) at each iteration? How come the result is 15 when a second call to f is made? I would expect the result to be 16, and 16 is the result of the first map function. A: This is called The Horror of Implicit Globals and it can be illustrated using your example: When doing var a = [1,2,3] and var b = [4,5,6] at the same time, the var a will take precedence. And when trying to access a[i] the value at this index will be printed. var a = [1, 2, 3], b = [4, 5, 6]; function f(g) { return g } function typeof(g) { return g } var e = a; // input var console.log(e.map(f).join()); // result 15 Q: Why is MaxValue of this class initialized as a field as opposed to a property? I was just reading a few lines in "Cracking the C# Interview" about the GetHashCode() method of the SortedList class and I noticed this: private object maxValue; public override int GetHashCode() { return unchecked(maxValue.GetHashCode()); } What I do not understand is why the field maxValue is initialized as an instance member? It seems like the same could be done by doing the following: public override int GetHashCode() { return unchecked(maxValue.GetHashCode());}
