* **It's a raster image editor:**

Photoshop makes it easy to create images containing pixels, not just fonts and shapes. It's a vector image editor, but the main advantage of the raster layer system in Photoshop (as opposed to some editors that use a bitmap model) is that Photoshop allows you to edit images pixel by pixel. A pixel is a single point of color and not a shape or object. You can add text, a border, or other shapes to create your image. But you can also change the color of individual pixels within an image. In fact, the process of image manipulation is done pixel by pixel, which makes it fast and efficient. This feature of Photoshop can get a bit confusing if you're new to it, but photographers with lots of experience using Photoshop (or other editors) know it well. I discuss this feature in detail later in this chapter. * **It's an image-editing tool for graphics:** Although it was originally designed as an image-editing tool for computer-generated images, Photoshop has been a very popular tool for the graphic arts. And some Photoshop users have been using it for traditional art as well. * **It's a media authoring tool:**

Photoshop enables you to create master images for printing on a variety of media — inkjet, photographic, digital printing, and the like. You can make complex

Image-editing skills are essential for creating a compelling slideshow. Media creation requires a variety of tools, not just a photo editor. You can use various tools to assemble and edit individual images to create a slideshow. * **It's a drawing tool:** *

Photoshop is an image-editing program. You can take a photo, colorize it, and crop it to create a picture, just as you can in some other programs. But beyond that, you can also create your own artistic type of images with Photoshop. You can create drawings, and you can use a canvas object for drawing or painting. For example, you can draw with brushes. You can create and save your drawings as files. You can also export your drawings into vector files — such as Adobe Illustrator. Photoshop has many drawing tools that enable you to Man shot in face while in sunbathing pool Margate — A 23-year-old Miami resident is recovering after being shot in the face while in a shallow swimming pool during a party at his relatives' home here. Marco Antonio Sosa was shot about 4:30 p.m. Saturday at a party on the second floor of a house at 8 W. Washington St., Margate police said. Sosa, who lives at the home, had been invited to the party by another relative, police said. Sosa was not injured in the shooting, but he was treated for shock. The Miami Beach Police Department, which is investigating the shooting, was notified by the Florida Department of Law Enforcement, the agency's spokeswoman, Yvonne Martinez, said. It was unclear how the shooting happened. Sosa was being treated at a local hospital as of Sunday morning, police said. When the Miami Beach Police Department responded to the scene Saturday afternoon, Miami Beach police had already been called to the scene, police said. In a news release Sunday, Miami Beach Police Chief Daniel Oates called the incident "a real tragedy" and said police were cooperating with the FDLE. He said the Miami Beach Police Department would obtain the involved relative's cellphone records. After the shooting, while Sosa was being treated for shock, a resident of the home called Miami Beach police to report an assault. The reporting person, who had also been attending the party, was taken to the city's police department for questioning, police said. Saturday's party was not being held at the exact location where the shooting took place, and the home owner, who lives at a different location, was not aware of the party until after the shooting, police said. Police said the parties in the house did not involve minors. Miami Beach police asked anyone with information about the shooting to call their detectives at 305-673-4800. No further details were available Sunday, and the Miami Beach Police Department could not be reached for comment.

Rhythm of the Regulator Pipes Why have I chosen to write about this topic and why will you find it interesting? Today, I found the answer to that question myself and then decided to share it with you. A partner introduced us to this one. It worked and it was cheaper than the usual alternatives. The main benefit was, the client could open the window again. Of course, the window opening caused a very loud noise, which was annoying. If you are the one working in this booth, you get to hear, watch and often even dance to the music from the pipes of the regulator, besides other noises. This is the modern version of a very old ventilation technology. Coming back to the regulations of the Hong Kong Building Services Department (HKSAR Building Services Department, BS.104) to which the partner that introduced us had gotten my partner the quote: “In Hong Kong, there are different types of air vents (not to confuse with “air conditioners”) used for ventilation. Loft ventilators are regulated in BS.104. In the building regulations, the loft ventilators are not given a minimum rating, but must be made of one of the specified materials and must be equipped with one of the specified sensors. For example, a small  $5\text{kW/m}^2$  (latticed) fan must be one of the specified materials for a loft ventilator, and must have one of the specified sensors (such as a temperature sensor). The BS.104 also lists other types of ventilators, such as: all-glass vents or windows (mandatory on all stories above the 9th floor); Ceiling Fans (mandatory on all stories above the 1st floor); Ceiling-fan vents (mandatory on all stories above the 1st floor); Ceiling-fan vents and loft vents (mandatory on all stories above the 9th floor); Fog fans (mandatory on all stories above the 9th floor); Fog vents (mandatory on all stories above the 9th floor) Standard fans (no minimum rating for the specified materials and no sensors); Window fans (mandatory on all stories above the 1st floor).” An interesting aspect of the regulations is the statement: “The Building Services Department (BSD) shall revise
