Q: What's the best way to handle user data in webapps? My experience with user data is that it's usually used in the application itself and is not stored on a server. This is because I don't want to store too much data on the server, and I prefer to keep a low coupling between the server and the clients. But I'm still looking for a good way to keep users' data on the server. I really don't need it to be too large, so it would be best if it was not too much data, but at the same time, I don't want to create a database on each user. So what's the best way to keep user data in a webapp? A: A "webapp" is nothing but a (the) browser (client), so what I suggest is that you put the user specific data into an http session. You could also save it into a cookie if you want (but cookies are not necessarily used for storing user data anyway). It is considered a bad practice though. See this SO question: What are the rules for session and authentication cookies in ASP.NET and how should they be used?. If you need more storage (such as something persistent) you could use a database or some other kind of backend that you run separately from the client, and let it communicate with the client to store and access the data. If all you need is a cache, you could use Memcache, or any of the many javascript-based caches such as memcached. If you really want to keep it "on the client" (as you put it), you could use something like IndexedDB. It requires a bit more effort though.

What's New In?

, especially for music. In addition to all these, simply enjoy your time in your favorite gatherings. I know I would. I was just on the front page of my friend's Facebook page, because she's a huge fan of Daft Punk and has tons of photos on her page. I've never seen a page with so many photos on it. I think this was the 1st post I read, and it made me laugh. As for the whole "gathering with friends" thing, I'm doing the same thing. I have a group of friends that I never used to hang out with, but they've now become my best friends. And I have some friends that I used to hang out with, and they're maybe the best friends of all of them. I don't know what I would do without my friends, they're like family to me now. I know people who just get by on Facebook, but I prefer hanging out in person, since that's where people are their real selves, the internet isn't. Hello everyone. Been lurking for a little while, but never posted before. I am Dave's wife, but they did not ask for any input on the topic, so I am posting as his wife's point of view. I am not here to judge, just give feedback. I agree and disagree with everything everyone else is posting. I am glad for the chance to express my thoughts. The reason for all the people's attention is obvious. We (I don't know if you have a little Dave in you; he did) like to hear others' thoughts and opinions. Some people agree and are posting, some people are just reading and do not comment. I think that it is wrong to feel like Dave is going to have a bad day, he is NOT on a mission to hurt anyone, but will be with the purpose of being a good teacher. For whatever reason, he seems to find humor with some things and others don't get it. Regardless of that, we have to take it easy on him. Enjoy the event, and enjoy the day. I hope there are many people who came for the music and stayed for the get together.

>>although I'm sure you're, as the other two have stated, better than most That's a step in the right direction. Hope for the best. >>we'll be throwing our own "Funky" Friday party at
